LIBERAL ARTS

Liberal Arts education does not train people for a specific job but rather a career. A liberal arts graduate often chooses a field of work through personal investigation rather than being recruited for his or her major. Due to the wide applicability of the skills acquired in liberal arts study, there are actually more job available to liberal arts majors than to technical majors, especially in the business world.

Typical Coursework associated with the study of Liberal Arts

Liberal Studies programs intend to provide a broad liberal arts and science education that cuts across the traditional subjects in the humanities, the sciences, and the social sciences. The widest possible variety of subject matter allows Interdisciplinary/Liberal Studies majors to tailor a course of study best suited to their individual needs and abilities. Liberal studies programs have no clear occupational objective; however, most programs allow students to specialize in areas that do have occupational objectives. In addition many students take education courses in order to be certified as teachers. Others use Liberal Studies as a background for graduate work in a wide variety of related subjects, such as Political Science, Sociology, Business Administration, and Law.
